Clayton County Public Schools (CCPS) continue to reflect a school system that strives for excellence as it works to improve the writing skills of their students. CCPS partnered with local institutions of higher education, including Clayton State University (CSU) and the Clayton Archway Partnership, to host a writing workshop for high school students. Dr. Susan Horn, a Professor at CSU and her students facilitated the workshop where they focused on the fundamentals of persuasive and technical writing skills. Over 30 students attended the Saturday workshop in March, and they represented every high school in Clayton County. Based on the student evaluations, the workshop was a huge success and it testified to the need for more academically focused workshops for the students of the community.
