In October, the Clayton County Board of Commissioners presented a Proclamation to the College of Environment and Design (CED) student interns, who completed more than 35 landscape designs for Clayton County. Clayton County leaders gave the proclamation to CED students to express their gratitude and appreciation for the phenomenal landscape designs completed for the community. The student’s designs resulted in a substantial monetary savings to the county. Detrick Stanford, Director, Clayton County Parks and Recreation said “The landscape architect students have done a phenomenal job and the work that has been done over the last three years would have cost the county more than $100,000 dollars.”

One of the goals for Clayton Archway Partnership under the priority of Economic Development is to address community-wide beautification issues and provide technical assistance to local governments and organizations in the area of landscape architect design.

This is the third year that Archway Partnership and Clayton Archway Partnership have partnered with the College of Environment and Design to offer internships to students and provide the community with landscape designs which are instrumental in their goal to beautify Clayton County.
